POLITICAL INTELLIGENCE.

A Kansas correspondent of a Boston paper says: The Hon. William Montgomery, of Pennsylvania, after spending a few days in the Territory, has just returned home. As he was neither fish, flesh, nor good salt herring, in the late canvass, (which resulted in his re-election to the House,) his political utterances were looked for with some interest here. While in this place, he expressed his hostility to the administration in very bitter terms, and classified himself with that somewhat dubious genus of politicians known as Douglas democrats. Mr. Montgomery is largely interested in several flourishing towns of the Territory, and came on private business. the Territory, and came on private business.

The adjourned meeting of the democracy of Richmond was held on Friday night. Mr. Aylett, the chairman, called the meeting to order, and aenounced that, agreeably to a resolution of the convention, he had appointed one hundred delegates to the Petersburg convention. The list of delegates was duly confirmed by acclamation. An adjournment was then moved, when Mr. Pryor inquired whether the meeting would adjourn before accomplishing the work before it. The meeting then refused to adjourn. Mr. Pryor offered a resolution that "John Letcher is in every way worthy of the confidence of the democracy of Virginia, and that if he be nominated, the democrats of Richmond will uphold him without reserve or disaffection." Mr. Pryor, upon offering this resoludemocrats of Richmond will upnote him without reserve or disaffection." Mr. Pryor, upon offering this resolu-tion, made a brief address, to which Mr. O. J. Wise re-plied. The discussion was prolonged by B. R. Well-ford, esq., and Mr. Pryor, who advocated the resolution, and by Mr. N. Tyler, one of the editors of the Enquirer, in opposition. Finally the resolution was adopted. A division was called for, but the crowd was so great, the African Church being filled to overflowing, that a divis-ion was impossible.

SERENADE TO SPEAKER ORR.

Hon. James L. Orr, Speaker of the House of Rpres tives, arrived in this city yesterday morning. At an early hour in the evening his friends determined to give him a serenade at half-past ten o'clock, and immediately the flecessary arrangements were made. Notwithstand-ing the lifelemency of the weather, (for it commissioned snowing an hour before Withers's brass band startled the guests of Browns' Hotel from their ease and quiet with their really fine music,) a respectable and enthusiastic as-semblage of gentlemen had taken possession of the pave-ment in front of the hotel. Such a testimonial could not but be restlicted by the contraction. not but be gratifying to Mr. Orr, and we do no more than express the sentiments of this community in saying that it as well deserved.

After several appropriate pieces had been played by the band, loud and repeated calls were made for Mr. Orr. Upon his appearance on the balcony, he was greeted with loud cheers, when he addressed the company as with loud cheers, when he addressed the company as follows:

Frillow-cittless: I thank you most cordially and heartily for this demonstration. I prize it the more highly because of the inclemency of the evening, and, if proof were wanting, the evening itself would furnish me with abundant evidence of your sincere regard. I have been a recipient of many kindnesses from the citizens of Washington. This is the tenth winter of my residence among you, and perhaps the last; [loud cries of "no!" "no!" and I feel many regrets at the stern fact that we are to part, and that these kindly relations are soon to be severed. Since I have been a representative, and while filling the important office of Speaker of the popular branch of the national legislature, I have striven, as you all know, to preserve and to perpetuate the Union of these States. I have been a party man—devoted to the principles of party—but the great object of my life has always been to defend and advance the interests of this great commonwealth. [Cheers.] During the ten years I have had the honor to represent a portion of the people of South Carolina the waves of fanaticism have rolled with fearful effect throughout the country and in this the capital of the nation. Until the present time they have been successfully resisted, and I hope there will always be found conservatism and patriotism enough to put out the fires of sectional strife, and that concord and harmony will again be restored to the country. [Loud cheers.] We ought to be one people; we were incorporated into an independent government under the auspices of as pure and patriotic men as ever lived. Wise men framed and put the government into operation, and if their work fail where are the men to be found competent to rear a structure like this girantic temple dedicated to liberty, which I trust your posterity and mine will be able to defend under all circumstances? [Enthusiastic applause.] The inclemency of the night forbids my trespassing longer upon your time. I thank you heartily for this ex

At the conclusion of Mr. Orr's remarks, the band again struck up ; after which Hon. C. J. Faulkner, of Virginia, and Hon. S. S. Cox, of Ohio, were called out, and made brief and appropriate addresses. The company then pro-ceeded to the residence of Gen. Joseph Lane, of Oregon, for the purpose of extending the serenade to him, which was duly acknowledged by that gentleman.

TEACHERS' MEETING.

The Columbian Association of Teachers held an ad-journed meeting at the Smithsonian Institution yesterday. The president being absent, the vice president took

The subject of elocution having been resumed, Prof. hards made some remarks in reference to Mandesystem of teaching that branch. At the last meet-had stated that Mandeville's system was in a reat measure founded upon that of Dr. Rush. He now lesired to qualify that remark a little. So far as the cultivation of the tones of the voice was concerned, it was correct, but no further. There was a marked difference in the modes of teaching elocution; and Mandeville's system was founded upon sentential structure. He proceeds upon the theory that there are a limited number of forms for the construction of sentences, which include all kinds in ordinary use. If, then, we know how a particular kind of sentence ought to be read, the same kind of sentence, wherever it occurs, should always be read in the same manner, making allowance for the difference in sentiment. This was not original with Prof. Mandeville, but the idea was started by Walker, who undertook to analyze our language, and founded his system upon the same principle. The principles laid down by Dr. Rush, and also by Mandeville, for the cultivation of the vocal powers, he believed to be correct. He also spoke of the importance of a correct system of punctuation, and with regard to expression. The same passage would convey different ideas to different minds on account of the associations which it would call up, and these associations varied with each individual; so that two persons would not read the same passage with the same spirit and energy, although, so far as the rules were concerned, they might both be governed by the same principles. Each would impart to it the coloring of his own mind.

Professor McLeod regretted that the very limited time which was allowed to each speaker afforded so little op-portunity to him to express his views properly on this most important question. He gave an outline of the plan of teaching elocution which he had employed for many years, and which he had found eminently successful. He believed Dr. Rush's philosophy of the voice af- EDR Bean, Maryland forded more facilities to a skilful, practical teacher than all other books upon the subject, ancient or modern. The Boston bank committee appointed to consider He also acknowledged his obligations to Sheridan. Knowles, and Archbishop Whately; and from these various sources he had matured a system of his own, simply because he could not find a satisfactory one anywhere else. This system he had been teaching for fifteen years. He also remarked upon the importance of making the analysis of language a constant branch of education in schools. If the English classics, as Shakspeare and Milton, should be studied with the same care that is bestowed upon Virgil and Homer, the pupil would succeed much better in bringing out the full sense of the author. Prof. Detrick thought cultivation of sentiment was nore essential than cultivation of voice, although that more essential than cultivation of voice, although that was very important. He urged the necessity of the J J Fields, New York speaker's feeling the sentiment himself, in order to make A E Swasey W K Marye, S Carolina his audience feel it.

Prof. McLood said that there was very little difference between the views expressed by the different members of the association, although each had dwelt more strongly upon that point which seemed to him of paramount importance. He alluded to the importance of action, or expressing sentiment, as well as feeling it.

Prof. Wight expressed his gratification that so many interesting views had been thrown out during this discount of the profit of the between the views expressed by the different members of
